The Dilemma of Death and the Language of Loss
An evening of conversation facilitated by Holly Pruett

To kick off the 7th Annual Afterlife Conference, please join us for an interactive evening focused on the language we use to talk about death and grief. A panel of experts from the conference will explore the pros and cons of popular euphemisms for death, whether death is the “end of life,” and multi-cultural approaches to talking about death and the afterlife. All participants will be invited into small group discussion.

Guest panelists:

Karen Wyatt MD
is a hospice physician who will speak at the conference on end-of-life care in clinical settings, and self-care for professionals working with death, dying and bereavement.

William Peters, MFT, M.Ed.
directs the Shared Crossing Project, a research initiative to examine the shared-death experience.

Austyn Wells
is a unique spiritual medium who combines her license in grief counseling with shamanism, energy medicine and intuitive client interaction.

Holly Pruett
is a Life-Cycle Celebrant, Home Funeral Guide, and founder of the Death Talk Project, which promotes useful, honest conversation about how we die, how we mourn, and how we care for and remember our dead.
